

AWARD: Health sustainability ambassador of the year

This award is open to any professional working in a health and care organisation (or related field) who has helped to drive sustainable development in their organisation and/or the wider health economy.

The award recognises an individual that has delivered, led or instigated a highly impactful or inspiring project. This individual will have worked to plan, deliver and implement a project or initiative that has delivered significant environmental, financial, social and/or local economic benefit.

This award is looking for innovators and instigators who have helped to raise the profile of the sustainable development agenda in health and care, developing and supporting ideas to tackle environmental, social and local economic problems, and are who committed to play an important role in the future development of a truly sustainable health and care system.

Applications must provide evidence of impact and good practice in engaging and inspiring others. The individual will have acted as a strong and vocal advocate at a local level who has driven change. If sustainability forms a part of a nominee's job role, nominations must demonstrate that the impacts of the nominee's actions have reached beyond the walls of their organisation.
